

Author's Rights for Publication in Journals & Yearbooks

As an author of an article in a journal or yearbook of Duncker & Humblot you are authorized to share your scientific publication under the following conditions.

Manuscript Version (>Accepted Manuscript<)

Articles in the Manuscript Version – i.e. the version accepted for publication but before format and layout editing by the publisher – may be disseminated in the following ways:

- ✓ Circulated anytime either in electronic (e.g. per email) or printed form to colleagues for personal, non-commercial use.
- ✓ Upon publication, posted on your personal website as well as on the website of the (research) institute to which you are affiliated.
- ✓ After a lapse of 12 months from the date of publication, uploaded to any non-commercial website or platform.

The publisher is not responsible for providing you with the Manuscript Version.

Each publication of the Manuscript Version must include an explicit statement referring to the Publisher's Version preferably by using the DOI (>Digital Object Identifier<), e.g.: »The final publication is available at: [dx.doi.org/\[fill in the article's DOI number\]](https://dx.doi.org/[fill in the article's DOI number])«.

Publisher's Version (>eOffprint<)

For many journals and yearbooks »eOffprints« are provided (see: www.duncker-humblot.de/eoffprints). Upon publication of the article, you will receive access to your online article resp. the issue or volume in which your article appears. If this is the case, you are permitted to download your article in the Publisher's Version and to circulate it – via email, instant messaging service or print – to your research colleagues for personal, non-commercial use.

It is explicitly forbidden to upload the Publisher's Version of your article to an online platform or to make it publicly accessible in any other way.

Further Questions?

Any further use, especially commercial use of your article (reprint, translation, etc.) requires the explicit permission of the publisher.
